

MagDI. A new way forward.

Understand the idea. Know what to ask. Choose your own next step.

01 · THE IDEA

Two small magnets. A shorter route for food.

MagDI is a keyhole weight-loss procedure. Two magnets hold two parts of the gut together while a new connection forms. Some food then takes a shortcut, helping change the signals involved in hunger and fullness. Smaller meals can feel more satisfying.

Once the connection has formed, the magnets pass naturally. The connection stays; the magnets do not.

02 · WHAT MAKES IT DIFFERENT

A different way to make the connection.

The bowel is not cut or stapled at the magnetic join. The original route through the intestine remains alongside the new shortcut. MagDI may be used on its own, with a sleeve, or after earlier weight-loss surgery.

Usually one night

in hospital for MagDI alone

Care in Ireland

surgeon, dietitian and follow-up

Results and recovery depend on your plan. The procedure uses general anaesthesia. If necessary, closing the connection requires another operation; an accompanying sleeve cannot be reversed.

03 · MAKE THE CONVERSATION ABOUT YOU

Five questions worth bringing.

1. Could MagDI suit my health, history and goals?
2. Would it be offered alone or with another procedure?
3. What results and recovery are realistic for me?
4. What are the risks, and what support would I receive?
5. What is the full price, and what does it include?

Your next step is your choice.

Questions first: speak with Auralia's bariatric team about the procedure and practicalities.

A surgeon's assessment: request a free assessment with Dr John Loy, online or in Dublin.

Neither request commits you to treatment.